A Century Of Progress

Charles A Beard

ExpoMuseum / 1933-'34 Century of Progress Exposition, Chicago Originally intended to commemorate Chicago's past, the Century of Progress Exposition came to symbolize hope for Chicago's and America's future in the midst of the Great Depression. The fair was a massive undertaking, showcasing the latest technological advancements and artistic achievements.

The Century of Progress International Exposition was held in Chicago to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the incorporation of the City of Chicago. The fair was a reflection of the era's optimism and the promise of a brighter future. It was a time of great innovation, and the Century of Progress Exposition was a testament to the progress that had been made in the fields of science, technology, and art.

During the fair, visitors had the opportunity to witness the latest inventions, from Streamliners to the FUTURLINER Restoration Project. The fair also featured a range of educational exhibits, such as the Displays of Architecture and Scientific Technology at Chicago's 1933-34 Century of Progress International Exposition.

The fair was a symbol of progress, and its impact on Chicago and the United States cannot be overstated. It helped to lift the spirits of people during a challenging time and was a reminder of the importance of innovation and progress.

The Century of Progress Exposition was a turning point in the history of Chicago and an important event in the progression of the city as it moved towards a new chapter in its history.