The document is a collection of references related to the Geology of Northland, specifically focusing on accretion, allochthons, and arcs at the edge of the New Zealand micro-continent. The authors referenced are Bernhard Spörli and David Kear. The references include various journals, books, and other publications that discuss the tectonic framework of Northland, the origin of the Northland Ophiolite, and the development of the Northland volcanic arc during the early Miocene. The geophysical profiles, microfossil, and K-Ar data provided insights into the development of the Northland volcanic arc during the early Miocene. The text also acknowledges the Royal Society of New Zealand for giving them the support to conduct their research.