Ehrenwort is a German word meaning “Word of Honour” this was what its operation, not one prisoner successfully escaped from Camp 30, Bowmanville' which took place on the weekend of Saturday October 10th, 1942.

During the Second World War, the site operated as a POW camp, and it was known as Camp 30. It was used to hold German prisoners of war. The camp was located in Bowmanville, Ontario, Canada, and was built to accommodate up to 800 prisoners.

The camp was run by the Canadian government, and the prisoners were treated fairly well. The guards were instructed to enforce the rules of the camp, but they were also told to be considerate of the prisoners' needs. The camp was operated for about two years, until 1944, when it was closed down.

Despite its relatively short lifespan, Camp 30 has become an important site in Canadian history. It is a reminder of the country's role in the Second World War, and it is also a symbol of the kindness and compassion that can be shown to prisoners of war.
